of the world's major economies grew by an average of 7.3 percent, up from 6.5 percent in 2011. The biggest contributor to the increase in global wealth was China, whose total assets increased to $16.9 trillion from $15.8 trillion, at the expense of the US, which saw its total assets decline by about $600 billion, a fall of 0.6 percent. The annual growth rate for the average of the world's 20 largest economies is the highest since 1994, when the G7 industrial countries experienced a 10.7 percent jump in total assets, according to the report. The average increase in the G20 for the previous five years was 7.6 percent. The report showed that total debt of the G20 economies grew by 6.9 percent, up from 5.9 percent in 2011, with the biggest debt increase for the US, up 6.9 percent from 2011,
